

FREQUENTLY ASKED QUESTIONS ON THE ENHANCED “3-IN-1” DRIVER’S LICENSE

Is the “3-in-1” driver’s license the same as REAL ID?

- NO.

What’s the difference?

- REAL ID is a federal plan for a national identification card. It is still being designed. The federal government has not yet figured out how to pay for it.
- Governor Napolitano’s 3-in-1 driver’s license is different. It will do three things:
  1. Function as secure identification that can be used instead of a passport to travel between Canada, Mexico and the United States. (It means that people who must frequently, legally cross the border will not have to constantly carry a passport.)
  2. Serve as verification of legal status. That means employers can accept this card as proof that a person is a citizen and can legally work in the United States.
  3. Act as an Arizona driver license.

Will everyone in Arizona have to get one?

- NO.
- Arizona citizens can choose to get the new driver’s license, but they will not be required to.

Will illegal immigrants be able to get this driver’s license?

- NO.
- Only U.S. citizens who are legal residents of Arizona can get the 3-in-1 driver’s license.

Will it be more expensive than a regular driver’s license?

- Yes, but the fee is expected to be small.

But didn’t the Governor commit Arizona to the federal REAL ID program?

- NO.
- The Governor believes that REAL ID, in its current form, is an unfunded federal mandate to the states.
- The Governor agreed to implement REAL ID
  1. only after the federal government has issued its final regulations and the state believes the regulations are reasonable; and
  2. the federal government provides Arizona with all the needed funding to implement those regulations

The Governor has agreed that Arizona will “take steps” toward having this enhanced ID become compliant with REAL ID only if those two major developments occur.

I've heard that someone could use a handheld scanner to steal sensitive personal information off of this 3-in-1 card. Is that true?

- NO.
- The card itself has no sensitive personal information on it. (It does have the holder's home address – information that has always appeared on the face of an Arizona driver's license.)
- The card has a chip that has just one piece of information on it: a randomly assigned number.
- The card will be issued with a plastic sleeve that makes the chip impossible to read until the sleeve is removed.

Then why is there a number embedded in the card?

- The number allows law enforcement officials to find you in the Motor Vehicle Division (MVD) database, if necessary.

Is the database secure?

- Very. It's the same database MVD uses now. It has multiple firewalls and security features to keep hackers out.

Is legislative approval needed for this new ID?

- Yes. The Legislature must change the law to allow the Arizona Department of Transportation to issue this new type of driver's license.
